

Children's Mental Health Network Friday Update

A Sampling of Links From Over the Years

<https://cmhnetwork.org>

We thought it would be fun to put together a sampling of links to the many different sources we have used over the years to bring you relevant information for children's mental health research, policy, and practice. This list is not exhaustive (a mere 560 links or so), and listed in random order. We hope it encourages you to think outside your defined lane of expertise or interest—a necessary skill if you are going to be an effective advocate. You never know what hidden gem lies under an effort with a slightly different name or focus. The possibilities are endless. Enjoy!

- Organization: Post-Crescent
Home URL: <https://www.postcrescent.com>
About:<https://rb.gy/empyyy>

The roots of The Post-Crescent date to 1853, when the Ryan brothers started The Appleton Crescent, named after a big bend in the Fox River that swept around the building where the weekly paper was printed. In 1859 came a competing paper, The Appleton Motor, that later became The Appleton Post. The two papers battled, first as weeklies then as dailies, until Feb. 2, 1920, when a merger produced the first Appleton Post-Crescent. The paper moved to 306 Washington St. in 1932 and remained family owned until 1983, when it was purchased by Thomson. In 2000, Gannett bought The Post-Crescent. In 2020, our offices moved to Appleton's historic 222 Building, at 222 W. College Ave.

- Organization: ACLU
Home URL: <https://www.aclu.org>
About: <https://www.aclu.org/about/aclu-history>

In the years following World War I, America was gripped by the fear that the Communist Revolution that had taken place in Russia would spread to the United States. As is often the case when fear outweighs rational debate, civil liberties paid the price. In November 1919 and January 1920, in what notoriously became known as the “Palmer Raids,” Attorney General Mitchell Palmer began rounding up and deporting so-called radicals. Thousands of people were arrested without warrants and without regard to constitutional protections against unlawful search and seizure. Those arrested were brutally treated and held in horrible conditions.

- Organization: Michigan
Home URL: <https://www.michigan.gov/som>
About: <https://www.michigan.gov/som/about-michigan>

In 1837, Michigan was officially admitted as the 26th state in the Union. However, Michigan's path to statehood wasn't without its own share of drama. A skirmish with Ohio known as the Toledo War delayed Michigan's statehood and led to a trade: Toledo remained in Ohio, while the Upper Peninsula became part of Michigan. Today, Michigan is the only state in the nation comprised of two peninsulas.

About: <https://ecoamerica.org/about/> ecoAmerica expands climate leadership beyond traditional environmental circles. We're building a diverse network of major institutions and thought leaders in five sectors — faith, health, communities, higher education, and business — who have the power to inspire tens of millions of Americans on climate change, in counties and communities nationwide including our heartland. Watch these videos to learn more about our programs and hear our leaders speak.
